

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, SANTA CRUZ

BERKELEY • DAVIS • IRVINE • LOS ANGELES • RIVERSIDE • SAN DIEGO • SAN FRANCISCO

SANTA BARBARA • SANTA CRUZ

DIVISION OF HUMANITIES

SANTA CRUZ, CALIFORNIA 95060

December 15, 1971

Dean James Gustafson
Yale Theological Seminary
Yale University
New Haven, Connecticut 06520

Dear Dean Gustafson:

It would be most helpful if you could give me names of people whom you know in the field of Religious Studies who might be effective in our program in the subject here at Santa Cruz. As perhaps you know, we are a young, relatively small campus of the University of California, presently of about four thousand five hundred students, charged with continuing growth to about ten thousand by the end of this decade. Religious Studies here is a Program still, rather than a Department (what we call a "Board").

Under the imaginative and devoted leadership of Professor Noel King, the Program has made do with courses offered for the most part by people for whom religious studies is a secondary interest. The program, nevertheless, has a great deal of vitality, commands the committed work of a number of good students, and represents one important manifestation of the truly liberal spirit on this campus. In commenting on the program after a recent visitation, Professor Walter Capps of Santa Barbara observed that its character is in keeping with our whole educational enterprise, that religion is not being approached simply by historical or recuperative methods. "Instead, it is being studied as one of the prime materials out of which life-views are formed and through which human consciousness (both personal and social) is given a grammar." At the same time, Professor Capps emphasized the troubling point that our course offering presents several exciting growing edges of the subject, while the central core is only thinly dealt with. This situation has been perforce, since only a less-than-minimum staff has been available to teach main line courses.

In Professor King's absence on sabbatical leave, I have assumed the role of acting Chairman of the program (little qualified as I am by my profession of English renaissance and modern literature). On January 9-11 I shall be going to the east coast for the annual AAC meeting in Washington, and I plan to circulate back by way of places where I might interview promising candidates in the field of religion.

The opening we plan to fill is at the beginning associate professor level. Our hope is to find a person with some experience who could take on the Assistant Chairmanship, or perhaps the Chairman's job proper. In his review of our program, Professor Capps described the man we need as someone who could take advantage of our already considerable though dispersed resources while developing the neglected core of the subject. He went on to say that "Such a man must possess organizational talents. He should also have the ability to recognize resources when he is in their presence, and this includes a knowledge of the resources available to him throughout the country. He should also be skilled in his own field, and should possess sufficient maturity in that field so that his self-discipline is not threatened by a sudden increase in organizational and administrative responsibilities. His field of specialization should be one of those that the program deems crucial."

The field of specialization can remain open, with perhaps a preference for a man who, along with a solid grounding in Western religious traditions, has specialized in Buddhist studies.

I realize that this is a tall order, especially when the remorseless financial limitations in the University of California system this year force us to consider only people at the beginning Associate level. But it seems to me that the right young scholar may find the position about as exciting as such things can be in this very imperfect time in an always imperfect world.

If it is convenient for you to do so, I would welcome your suggesting to an appropriate person that he write directly to me, sending along a vitae and, if he likes, something which he has written recently. Or if you send me a name or names, I'll write off to request such materials. I shall very much appreciate your limiting nominations to a very few very likely people: otherwise, in these depressed times, I'll be absolutely swamped with applications!

I shall be most grateful for any help you can give me in this matter.

Sincerely,

C. L. Barber
Vice Chancellor-Humanities
Acting Chairman-Religious Studies

cc: Chancellor McHenry
Professor Noel King
Professor Walter Capps ✓

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, SANTA CRUZ

BERKELEY • DAVIS • IRVINE • LOS ANGELES • RIVERSIDE • SAN DIEGO • SAN FRANCISCO

SANTA BARBARA • SANTA CRUZ

OFFICE OF THE VICE CHANCELLOR
DIVISION OF HUMANITIES

SANTA CRUZ, CALIFORNIA 95060

December 15, 1971

Dean Joseph M. Kitagawa
Chicago School of Religion
University of Chicago
5801 Ellis Avenue
Chicago, Illinois 60637

Dear Dean Kitagawa:

It would be most helpful if you could give me names of people whom you know in the field of Religious Studies who might be effective in our program in the subject here at Santa Cruz. As perhaps you know, we are a young, relatively small campus of the University of California, presently of about four thousand five hundred students, charged with continuing growth to about ten thousand by the end of this decade. Religious Studies here is a Program still, rather than a Department (what we call a "Board").

Under the imaginative and devoted leadership of Professor Noel King, the Program has made do with courses offered for the most part by people for whom religious studies is a secondary interest. The program, nevertheless, has a great deal of vitality, commands the committed work of a number of good students, and represents one important manifestation of the truly liberal spirit on this campus. In commenting on the program after a recent visitation, Professor Walter Capps of Santa Barbara observed that its character is in keeping with our whole educational enterprise, that religion is not being approached simply by historical or recuperative methods. "Instead, it is being studied as one of the prime materials out of which life-views are formed and through which human consciousness (both personal and social) is given a grammar." At the same time, Professor Capps emphasized the troubling point that our course offering presents several exciting growing edges of the subject, while the central core is only thinly dealt with. This situation has been perforce, since only a less-than-minimum staff has been available to teach main line courses.

In Professor King's absence on sabbatical leave, I have assumed the role of acting Chairman of the program (little qualified as I am by my profession of English renaissance and modern literature). On January 9-11 I shall be going to the east coast for the annual AAC meeting in Washington, and I plan to circulate back by way of places where I might interview promising candidates in the field of religion.

Dean Joseph M. Kitagawa

The opening we plan to fill is at the beginning associate professor level. Our hope is to find a person with some experience who could take on the Assistant Chairmanship, or perhaps the Chairman's job proper. In his review of our program, Professor Capps described the man we need as someone who could take advantage of our already considerable though dispersed resources while developing the neglected core of the subject. He went on to say that "Such a man must possess organizational talents. He should also have the ability to recognize resources when he is in their presence, and this includes a knowledge of the resources available to him throughout the country. He should also be skilled in his own field, and should possess sufficient maturity in that field so that his self-discipline is not threatened by a sudden increase in organizational and administrative responsibilities. His field of specialization should be one of those that the program deems crucial."

The field of specialization can remain open, with perhaps a preference for a man who, along with a solid grounding in Western religious traditions, has specialized in Buddhist studies.

I realize that this is a tall order, especially when the remorseless financial limitations in the University of California system this year force us to consider only people at the beginning Associate level. But it seems to me that the right young scholar may find the position about as exciting as such things can be in this very imperfect time in an always imperfect world.

If it is convenient for you to do so, I would welcome your suggesting to an appropriate person that he write directly to me, sending along a vitae and, if he likes, something which he has written recently. Or if you send me a name or names, I'll write off to request such materials. I shall very much appreciate your limiting nominations to a very few very likely people: otherwise, in these depressed times, I'll be absolutely swamped with applications!

I shall be very grateful for any help you can give me in this matter.

Sincerely,

C. L. Barber

C. L. Barber
Vice Chancellor - Humanities
Acting Chairman - Religious Studies

cc: Chancellor McHenry
Professor Noel King
Professor Walter Capps

Please give my regards to Lib Winter, my neighbor in the summer at Barnet, Vermont, and to Jon Smith, an old Harvard friend of my adult son.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, SANTA CRUZ

BERKELEY • DAVIS • IRVINE • LOS ANGELES • RIVERSIDE • SAN DIEGO • SAN FRANCISCO

SANTA BARBARA • SANTA CRUZ

OFFICE OF THE VICE CHANCELLOR
DIVISION OF HUMANITIES

SANTA CRUZ, CALIFORNIA 95060

December 15, 1971

Dean Krister Stendahl
Harvard Theological Seminary
Harvard University
Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138

Dear Dean Stendahl:

It would be most helpful if you could give me names of people whom you know in the field of Religious Studies who might be effective in our program in the subject here at Santa Cruz. As perhaps you know, we are a young, relatively small campus of the University of California, presently of about four thousand five hundred students, charged with continuing growth to about ten thousand by the end of this decade. Religious Studies here is a Program still, rather than a Department (what we call a "Board").

Under the imaginative and devoted leadership of Professor Noel King, the Program has made do with courses offered for the most part by people for whom religious studies is a secondary interest. The program, nevertheless, has a great deal of vitality, commands the committed work of a number of good students, and represents one important manifestation of the truly liberal spirit on this campus. In commenting on the program after a recent visitation, Professor Walter Capps of Santa Barbara observed that its character is in keeping with our whole educational enterprise, that religion is not being approached simply by historical or recuperative methods. "Instead, it is being studied as one of the prime materials out of which life-views are formed and through which human consciousness (both personal and social) is given a grammar." At the same time, Professor Capps emphasized the troubling point that our course offering presents several exciting growing edges of the subject, while the central core is only thinly dealt with. This situation has been perforce, since only a less-than-minimum staff has been available to teach main line courses.

In Professor King's absence on sabbatical leave, I have assumed the role of acting Chairman of the program (little qualified as I am by my profession of English renaissance and modern literature). On January 9-11 I shall be going to the east coast for the annual AAC meeting in Washington, and I plan to circulate back by way of places where I might interview promising candidates in the field of religion.

Dean Krister Stendahl

The opening we plan to fill is at the beginning associate professor level. Our hope is to find a person with some experience who could take on the Assistant Chairmanship, or perhaps the Chairman's job proper. In his review of our program, Professor Capps described the man we need as someone who could take advantage of our already considerable though dispersed resources while developing the neglected core of the subject. He went on to say that "Such a man must possess organizational talents. He should also have the ability to recognize resources when he is in their presence, and this includes a knowledge of the resources available to him throughout the country. He should also be skilled in his own field, and should possess sufficient maturity in that field so that his self-discipline is not threatened by a sudden increase in organizational and administrative responsibilities. His field of specialization should be one of those that the program deems crucial."

The field of specialization can remain open, with perhaps a preference for a man who, along with a solid grounding in Western religious traditions, has specialized in Buddhist studies.

I realize that this is a tall order, especially when the remorseless financial limitations in the University of California system this year force us to consider only people at the beginning Associate level. But it seems to me that the right young scholar may find the position about as exciting as such things can be in this very imperfect time in an always imperfect world.

If it is convenient for you to do so, I would welcome your suggesting to an appropriate person that he write directly to me, sending along a vitae and, if he likes, something which he has written recently. Or if you send me a name or names, I'll write off to request such materials. I shall very much appreciate your limiting nominations to a very few very likely people: otherwise, in these depressed times, I'll be absolutely swamped with applications!

I shall be very grateful for any help you can give me in this matter.

Sincerely,

C. L. Barber

C. L. Barber
Vice Chancellor - Humanities
Acting Chairman - Religious Studies

cc: Chancellor McHenry
Professor Noel King
Professor Walter Capps ✓

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, SANTA CRUZ

BERKELEY • DAVIS • IRVINE • LOS ANGELES • RIVERSIDE • SAN DIEGO • SAN FRANCISCO

SANTA BARBARA • SANTA CRUZ

DIVISION OF HUMANITIES

SANTA CRUZ, CALIFORNIA 95060

December 15, 1971

Dean Claude Welsh
Pacific School of Religion
Berkeley, California 94709

It would be most helpful if you could give me names of people whom you know in the field of Religious Studies who might be effective in our program in the subject here at Santa Cruz. As perhaps you know, we are a young, relatively small campus of the University of California, presently of about four thousand five hundred students, charged with continuing growth to about ten thousand by the end of this decade. Religious Studies here is a Program still, rather than a Department (what we call a "Board").

Under the imaginative and devoted leadership of Professor Noel King, the Program has made do with courses offered for the most part by people for whom religious studies is a secondary interest. The program, nevertheless, has a great deal of vitality, commands the committed work of a number of good students, and represents one important manifestation of the truly liberal spirit on this campus. In commenting on the program after a recent visitation, Professor Walter Capps of Santa Barbara observed that its character is in keeping with our whole educational enterprise, that religion is not being approached simply by historical or recuperative methods. "Instead, it is being studied as one of the prime materials out of which life-views are formed and through which human consciousness (both personal and social) is given a grammar." At the same time, Professor Capps emphasized the troubling point that our course offering presents several exciting growing edges of the subject, while the central core is only thinly dealt with. This situation has been perforce, since only a less-than-minimum staff has been available to teach main line courses.

In Professor King's absence on sabbatical leave, I have assumed the role of acting Chairman of the program (little qualified as I am by my profession of English renaissance and modern literature). On January 9-11 I shall be going to the east coast for the annual AAC meeting in Washington, and I plan to circulate back by way of places where I might interview promising candidates in the field of religion.

The opening we plan to fill is at the beginning associate professor level. Our hope is to find a person with some experience who could take on the Assistant Chairmanship, or perhaps the Chairman's job proper. In his review of our program, Professor Capps described the man we need as someone who could take advantage of our already considerable though dispersed resources while developing the neglected core of the subject. He went on to say that "Such a man must possess organizational talents. He should also have the ability to recognize resources when he is in their presence, and this includes a knowledge of the resources available to him throughout the country. He should also be skilled in his own field, and should possess sufficient maturity in that field so that his self-discipline is not threatened by a sudden increase in organizational and administrative responsibilities. His field of specialization should be one of those that the program deems crucial."

The field of specialization can remain open, with perhaps a preference for a man who, along with a solid grounding in Western religious traditions, has specialized in Buddhist studies.

I realize that this is a tall order, especially when the remorseless financial limitations in the University of California system this year force us to consider only people at the beginning Associate level. But it seems to me that the right young scholar may find the position about as exciting as such things can be in this very imperfect time in an always imperfect world.

If it is convenient for you to do so, I would welcome your suggesting to an appropriate person that he write directly to me, sending along a vitae and, if he likes, something which he has written recently. Or if you send me a name or names, I'll write off to request such materials. I shall very much appreciate your limiting nominations to a very few very likely people: otherwise, in these depressed times, I'll be absolutely swamped with applications!

I shall be most grateful for any help you can give me in this matter.

Sincerely,

C. L. Barber

C. L. Barber
Vice Chancellor-Humanities
Acting Chairman-Religious Studies

cc: Chancellor McHenry
Professor Noel King
Professor Walter Capps

I am very sorry that your schedule kept you from coming down here week before last (though I can fully understand how schedule do that sort of thing!). I do hope for a rain-check visit from you - or for a chance to meet in Berkeley.
Joe Barber

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, SANTA CRUZ

BERKELEY • DAVIS • IRVINE • LOS ANGELES • RIVERSIDE • SAN DIEGO • SAN FRANCISCO

SANTA BARBARA • SANTA CRUZ

DIVISION OF HUMANITIES

SANTA CRUZ, CALIFORNIA 95060

December 15, 1971

Professor Alfred Martin
Union Theological Seminary
3041 Broadway
New York, New York 10027

Dear Al:

Forgive my sending you a letter written to several schools - no time in this whirligig job to write more personally.

It would be most helpful if you could give me names of people whom you know in the field of Religious Studies who might be effective in our program in the subject here at Santa Cruz. As perhaps you know, we are a young, relatively small campus of the University of California, presently of about four thousand five hundred students, charged with continuing growth to about ten thousand by the end of this decade. Religious Studies here is a Program still, rather than a Department (what we call a "Board").

Under the imaginative and devoted leadership of Professor Noel King, the Program has made do with courses offered for the most part by people for whom religious studies is a secondary interest. The program, nevertheless, has a great deal of vitality, commands the committed work of a number of good students, and represents one important manifestation of the truly liberal spirit on this campus. In commenting on the program after a recent visitation, Professor Walter Capps of Santa Barbara observed that its character is in keeping with our whole educational enterprise, that religion is not being approached simply by historical or recuperative methods. "Instead, it is being studied as one of the prime materials out of which life-views are formed and through which human consciousness (both personal and social) is given a grammar." At the same time, Professor Capps emphasized the troubling point that our course offering presents several exciting growing edges of the subject, while the central core is only thinly dealt with. This situation has been perforce, since only a less-than-minimum staff has been available to teach main line courses.

In Professor King's absence on sabbatical leave, I have assumed the role of acting Chairman of the program (little qualified as I am by my profession of English renaissance and modern literature). On January 9-11 I shall be going to the east coast for the annual AAC meeting in Washington, and I plan to circulate back by way of places where I might interview promising candidates in the field of religion.

The opening we plan to fill is at the beginning associate professor level. Our hope is to find a person with some experience who could take on the Assistant Chairmanship, or perhaps the Chairman's job proper. In his review of our program, Professor Capps described the man we need as someone who could take advantage of our already considerable though dispersed resources while developing the neglected core of the subject. He went on to say that "Such a man must possess organizational talents. He should also have the ability to recognize resources when he is in their presence, and this includes a knowledge of the resources available to him throughout the country. He should also be skilled in his own field, and should possess sufficient maturity in that field so that his self-discipline is not threatened by a sudden increase in organizational and administrative responsibilities. His field of specialization should be one of those that the program deems crucial."

The field of specialization can remain open, with perhaps a preference for a man who, along with a solid grounding in Western religious traditions, has specialized in Buddhist studies.

I realize that this is a tall order, especially when the remorseless financial limitations in the University of California system this year force us to consider only people at the beginning Associate level. But it seems to me that the right young scholar may find the position about as exciting as such things can be in this very imperfect time in an always imperfect world.

If it is convenient for you to do so, I would welcome your suggesting to an appropriate person that he write directly to me, sending along a vitae and, if he likes, something which he has written recently. Or if you send me a name or names, I'll write off to request such materials. I shall very much appreciate your limiting nominations to a very few very likely people: otherwise, in these depressed times, I'll be absolutely swamped with applications!

I shall be most grateful for any help you can give me in this matter.

Sincerely,

C. L. Barber
Vice Chancellor-Humanities
Acting Chairman-Religious Studies

cc: Chancellor McHenry

Professor Noel King

Professor Walter Capps

*I am just leaving for Dorset, Vermont where my youngest son, Robin, is & married in the house Betty grew up in.
I'm in Amherst a regular interval because my oldest son's children are there — always with strong feelings of nostalgia. I do hope we meet somewhere sometime soon: I remember our conversation with great pleasure.*

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, SANTA CRUZ

BERKELEY • DAVIS • IRVINE • LOS ANGELES • RIVERSIDE • SAN DIEGO • SAN FRANCISCO

SANTA BARBARA • SANTA CRUZ

DIVISION OF HUMANITIES

SANTA CRUZ, CALIFORNIA 95060

December 15, 1971

Director
Society for Religion in Higher Education
400 Prospect Avenue
New Haven, Connecticut 06520

Dear Sir:

It would be most helpful if you could give me names of people whom you know in the field of Religious Studies who might be effective in our program in the subject here at Santa Cruz. As perhaps you know, we are a young, relatively small campus of the University of California, presently of about four thousand five hundred students, charged with continuing growth to about ten thousand by the end of this decade. Religious Studies here is a Program still, rather than a Department (what we call a "Board").

Under the imaginative and devoted leadership of Professor Noel King, the Program has made do with courses offered for the most part by people for whom religious studies is a secondary interest. The program, nevertheless, has a great deal of vitality, commands the committed work of a number of good students, and represents one important manifestation of the truly liberal spirit on this campus. In commenting on the program after a recent visitation, Professor Walter Capps of Santa Barbara observed that its character is in keeping with our whole educational enterprise, that religion is not being approached simply by historical or recuperative methods. "Instead, it is being studied as one of the prime materials out of which life-views are formed and through which human consciousness (both personal and social) is given a grammar." At the same time, Professor Capps emphasized the troubling point that our course offering presents several exciting growing edges of the subject, while the central core is only thinly dealt with. This situation has been perforce, since only a less-than-minimum staff has been available to teach main line courses.

In Professor King's absence on sabbatical leave, I have assumed the role of acting Chairman of the program (little qualified as I am by my profession of English renaissance and modern literature). On January 9-11 I shall be going to the east coast for the annual AAC meeting in Washington, and I plan to circulate back by way of places where I might interview promising candidates in the field of religion.

The opening we plan to fill is at the beginning associate professor level. Our hope is to find a person with some experience who could take on the Assistant Chairmanship, or perhaps the Chairman's job proper. In his review of our program, Professor Capps described the man we need as someone who could take advantage of our already considerable though dispersed resources while developing the neglected core of the subject. He went on to say that "Such a man must possess organizational talents. He should also have the ability to recognize resources when he is in their presence, and this includes a knowledge of the resources available to him throughout the country. He should also be skilled in his own field, and should possess sufficient maturity in that field so that his self-discipline is not threatened by a sudden increase in organizational and administrative responsibilities. His field of specialization should be one of those that the program deems crucial."

The field of specialization can remain open, with perhaps a preference for a man who, along with a solid grounding in Western religious traditions, has specialized in Buddhist studies.

I realize that this is a tall order, especially when the remorseless financial limitations in the University of California system this year force us to consider only people at the beginning Associate level. But it seems to me that the right young scholar may find the position about as exciting as such things can be in this very imperfect time in an always imperfect world.

If it is convenient for you to do so, I would welcome your suggesting to an appropriate person that he write directly to me, sending along a vitae and, if he likes, something which he has written recently. Or if you send me a name or names, I'll write off to request such materials. I shall very much appreciate your limiting nominations to a very few very likely people: otherwise, in these depressed times, I'll be absolutely swamped with applications!

I shall be most grateful for any help you can give me in this matter.

Sincerely,

C. L. Barber
Vice Chancellor-Humanities
Acting Chairman-Religious Studies

cc: Chancellor McHenry
Professor Noel King
Professor Walter Capps ✓