The battle over UCSD's backyard — what to do with the La Jolla Farms

BY MICHAEL AHN
Senior Writer

If you get on North Torrey Road and head north toward the Salk Institute, past Muir College, you will see off to your left a tract of land known as La Jolla Farms.

Not much stands on it now, there is only an empty barn, a boarded-up stable and some poles, which horses used to jump over. Everything is weedy and quiet.

Yet this is the place over which a battle is being fought. It is a battle that involves all sorts of people: millionaires and housewives, students and teachers. It is a battle of “good guys” and “bad guys.”

Sickles O’Brien, a San Diego developer, is planning to build 36 town houses and seven estate homes, a research and development center, and two conference centers along with several thousand square feet of commercial space on this 24 acre parcel of UCSD property. And, with this planned development has come a wave of protest from the residents who would live near the proposed project.

“Here's the way to the end, and we're going to fight them...” said Patricia Hasse, whose husband, Robert, heads the La Jolla Farms Homeowners Association, the largest group to oppose this plan.

“We're trying to get people to think,” said Mrs. Hasse. “We want them to know what kind of slick advertising Sickles O'Brien is trying to pull.”

The La Jolla Farms Homeowner's Association is quite unhappy with the prospect of a commercial development and a wet lab being erected across the street from their homes. But, since UCSD owns the land, they can only advise UCSD as to how the land should be used. They still have a chance to change Chancellor Atkinson's mind before he makes a final decision on the plan this Wednesday.

“We're going to fight this thing all the way to the end, and we're going to win,” said Mrs. Hasse.

In the minds of O'Brien and Brad Neal, the architect of the project, there is no doubt that Blackhorse Farms (the name of the proposed development) will be useful to the community. In fact, both O'Brien and Neal are absolutely convinced that the proposal will use the land to its maximum potential.

“Blackhorse Farms is a sensitive blend of uses that is compatible to the university and the surrounding community as well,” said Mr. Neal.

It all depends on your perception of the land. Is part of La Jolla or is it part of the University which owns it? We feel it is part of UCSD. Of course, no plan is perfect, no plan can satisfy everybody. But this new science research center will bring the best minds of the country to San Diego. Neal, along with Mr. O'Brien, has been under a lot of stress lately. They have presented their plan to the public five times each and every time he had a barrage of accusations from angry homeowners. Among the sensitive points are: The buffer zone between the complex and the homes and whether or not this buffer of vegetation will be adequate. Also in the minds of some homeowners is the question of using the land for commercial purposes. Some feel that when William Black, the original owner, sold the property to the school in 1967 he meant for it to be used for purely educational purposes. Since Black is now deceased, this can only be speculation.

To the UCSD administration, the La Jolla Farms means money.

If you look at the old stables and all the empty, barren land you are looking at dollars and cents, lots of them. By reason of its existence in a place near a university and next to lavish, expensive homes, all 24 acres is worth millions.

But the Farms also means money to the neighboring residents: if a complex is built on the Farms the value of the neighboring property will not continue to rise.

And so the university administration is faced with difficult choice: either build nothing on the property and gain nothing or build on the property and sacrifice the value of the neighboring property and sacrifice the value of the neighboring property.

La Jolla Farms belongs to UCSD. It used to belong to a man named Bill Black, who used to own most of this property bordering Torrey Pines Road. The famous (or infamous) Black's Beach was named after him.

William Black bought the land shortly after WWll, and he built a home for his family there. This home later became the Chancellor's house. Bill Black decided to make his property a cattle ranch where, it was hoped, he could raise some prize Herefords. This was not to be, and the estate homes were built in the neighborhood.

But this was also not to be. Neglect of the thoroughbreds but kept the stables. He felt that he could develop the property as residential lots. The added attraction was that if people bought a home on his property they could raise horses at the stables close by. It was known as a “Beach and Bridle club.” This idea went to work.

By 1965 La Jolla Farms had become a prestigious residential neighborhood. Auge Handley was the trainer at the Stables, and he kept over a hundred horses on that lot. In 1966 Auge Handley sold his stables to a doctor living near La Jolla Farms. After Mr. Handley left the stables became more exclusive, cutting down the number of student stables to fifty and raising the price of horses from $200-$500 to a maximum of $25,000. From then on the stables traded hands up until last year, when the last trainer was evicted for not paying his time.

That was Josh

It was one of the most well-organized and merciless advertising campaigns on the UCSD campus in many years. From the posters on Urey Hall to the leaflets distributed all over campus to the words on classroom blackboards throughout the quarter, Josh was a mysterious phenomenon never quite explained.

Last week, the mystery became a reality. Josh McDowell, a lecturer, was invited to the Revelle cafeteria on Wednesday and Thursday. He spoke on the psychology of campaigns on topics dealing with sex, scientific and sexual activity will enhance such activity. Letter to the Editor where's Joseph McCarthy when you need him? Those cunning, conniving commies have really done it this time. They've got one of their goons in the White House, and not only are they threatening to do something dastardly, but they're also destroying the people's faith in the law. The tough guys went out and found the kids who blood all over the Capitol building, and they should find those people and put them in jail.

Editor:

The gutless goons went out and found the kids who blood all over the Capitol building, and they should find those people and put them in jail.

Editor: The one thing about this campaign is that it's been overwhelming. The student newspaper has been flooded with letters, and the Editorial Board has been swamped with complaints. It's a sad commentary on our student body that we have to resort to such measures to get our message across.

The political cost of Nancy's wardrobe

Fred Fielding, former assistant to Nixon White House counsel John Dean has a problem. Fielding is Ronald Reagan's law partner, and he has been made a public figure by the sale of a wardrobe that he purchased for his new wife, Sandra. Reagan's household was declared bankrupt, and according to Fielding's law partner, the sale of the wardrobe was a public service.

Several government officials, including Attorney General Edward H. Levi, have been made aware of the sale. However, there is no clear picture of what the sale meant for the legal profession. It is not clear if the sale was legal or illegal. There is speculation that Fielding's law partner may be involved in an attempt to cover up the sale.

Reagan's law partner, Michael H. Winkler, has been contacted by the Internal Revenue Service, and there is speculation that the sale may have been a tax evasion.

The sale has been reported as a public service, as the proceeds from the sale will be used to pay for legal fees. However, there is no clear picture of what the sale means for the legal profession.

Josh came, left his mark on two large audiences

Josh, a local celebrity, has made a mark on two large audiences. In his recent performance, he captivated the audience with his new style of music. The audience was so impressed that they demanded more of his music.

In his interview, Josh stated that his new style of music is a combination of different genres. He stated that his new style of music is a fusion of rock, pop, and hip-hop. He also mentioned that his new style of music is a reflection of his personal life.

His interview was well received, and he stated that he is excited about the future of his music. He mentioned that he is looking forward to releasing more music in the future.

Josh claimed that the second type of love also produces a person of a fulfilling relationship because it produces compassion, envy, obsessed, and fear. This is love, the one that you have, attitude which comes from the love for a person or for a condition.

In the third type of love, "I love you, period," the thinker of the other person then, and the only claim, this type is hidden not on what you can give, not rather on what you can take. According to this type, the other person has a very open relationship.

"I asked Josh to come into my life and to change me from the inside-out through a relationship. As a result of that, I've had to let me on the inside that I gave me the opportunity to change the change, the church should be a designated charged army. I'm not hard enough, the enemy to live in peace and welcome the new, faced with losing policies, the support, and submission to the Gospel of Jesus."

Josh's father explained this concept by examining the "liberal view of the end of time" which tells of "warriors" between God's people and the afterworld people.

La Jolla Farms: the development question

UCSD planners begin to solidify ideas for scenic land

BY THE BRYN R. KOBAYASHI
This is the first of a series of articles on the -campus environment, and I would appreciate any comments that interested readers may care to present or on the amount of detail.

The university administration has asked the UCSD community with some fear about one plan in particular: the proposed development on the northeast corner of the campus, near the Olympic Gym, the East Campus Center, and the Student Employment Office. By January 29th and pick up job referrals to the Warren Development Office, 701 South Drive, La Jolla, and you will receive complete information regarding the position and selection process.

Although the panel was objective, Gibbs felt that the La Jolla Farms Homeowners Association would be sympathetic to the needs of the home owners, but not to the point that he was ready to support the project. Gibbs added that if there are three or four of them, then they could do something for the community.

The moment when all of this argument and planning and testing will be over, and the project will either make a decision as to whether or not to approve the plan, was when it was to be presented to the Board of Regents in Berkeley. One panel meted out of faculty, administration and one student, has received the plan and has recommended to Chancellor Ackerman that his approval is given when it is given to the Regents. Gibbs, having had this to say about the project, had no idea what to do and has to study it further. (The Regents note that the home owners association "is a good place for a community"

Dr. Werner H. Kobayashi was asked the UCSD community with some fear about one plan in particular: the proposal to extend our current carrying capacities to the development of new campus buildings. He pointed out that there is little chance of the project, however, as he will have to decide whether or not to approve the plan.

The company is known for its innovative use of anti-instrumentation, improvisation, and nonconventional electronic music and occasionally incorporates film, video projections, and plastic sculpture into performances. New group helps performers
Encinitas based outfit counsels interested songwriters

By Steven Byrnes

Breaking into show biz is tough these days. Not long ago, all it took was a tight sweater and a few hours lounging on the bar at the malt shop, and bingo, you were famous. Now the rules have changed. The aspiring songwriters, singers, and performers need to have everything from their material, to production of demo tapes, to making important professional contacts. It is precisely this need that a new organization, Songwriters, Artists and Managers Office (SAMO), hopes to provide for musicians. The non-profit provides workshops for area musicians; has experienced professionals that will impart much of the fundamentals of music and the polish necessary for a professional career. The workshops begin February 1, are in two categories. Intermediate Songwriting and Advanced Songwriting, and are offered to people already performing. Fees for the courses begin at $90 and range to $300 with meetings once a week for four weeks.

Fencing is popular in the UC schools and this weekend's event at UCSD will feature a school that has qualified a number of fencers for the Olympic team. One of these fencers is a senior on the Triton basketball team who recently qualified for the Olympic team and has been training for the past year with the school's fencing program.

"I think we are living in a time in which the dynamics of that drama are being enacted," he concluded.

Capps explained that when a situation is set up as one country against another as a struggle of good against evil, it is easier for people to think of it as the good guys against the bad guys.

Capps feels the first step is to diminish the intensity of the struggle between the two world powers.

Volleyball's men follow women's tough act

By SCOTT ALLISON
Senior Staff Writer

The UCSD men's volleyball team has a tough act to follow. Just last month their female counterparts, led by two All-Americans, captured the NCAA championship trophy, trouncing virtually every opponent along the way.

This year's men's team will feature no All-Americans. And they will win no NCAA championship. By the end of the season they may be fortunate to be at the .500 mark. But it won't be because UCSD is setting up a bad men's volleyball team -- they're actually quite talented and deep at every position. It's just that, by and large, the Tritons are much shorter.

Coach Doug Dannevik, along with UCSD in the Western Collegiate Volleyball Conference are tough California State Northridge, UC Riverside, La Verne and Cal Poly San Luis Obispo. "We can win our league," predicts Dannevik, whose squad begins conference play Friday, February 12 versus Riverside at home.

The Tritons' next home game is tomorrow night, when they face San Diego State at 7:30 p.m.

Wrestling Saturday

The Third Annual Intramural Wrestling Tournament will be held this Saturday, Jan. 30, in UCSD's main gym. Matches begin at 10 a.m. and go throughout the day. Every participant is guaranteed at least two opportunities. There will be 12 weight divisions and IM coordinator Scott Berndes expects 75-85 wrestlers. CIF officials will monitor the action, with California Interscholastic Federation rules in effect. Berndes has made allowances for out-of-shape athletes and has announced that all match periods will be cut to one minute.

Kegger Feb. 13

Athletes from all Triton Intercollegiate teams are welcomed to the UCSD's Triton Quad tourney Feb. 13. The gathering, held Saturday, January 25, will feature no All-Americans. And they will win no NCAA championship. By the end of the season they may be fortunate to be at the .500 mark. But it won't be because UCSD is setting up a bad men's volleyball team -- they're actually quite talented and deep at every position. It's just that, by and large, the Tritons are much shorter.
